REAL ESTATE & BUILDING.

A BUSINESS VIEW OF THE QUESTION OF RENTS IN WASHINGTON.

If They Are Higher Here Than in Other Cities There is Good Reason for It-The Real Estate Market Unchanged-Building Operations Begin to Fall Off for the Winter.

There was no marked increased activity in the real estate market last week. The sales which were made were generally small houses or moderately cheap lots upon which the erection of residences were intended. Little property was sold for speculative purposes and that which changed hands was of a very safe nature. It would seem that the heavy operators had obtained all the property they cared to carry, and knowing their investments to be paying ones, are holding their ownings until the spring advance in prices.

Building operations were correspondingly dull. But sixteen permits were issued and outside of the northwest the amount to be invested in new houses was comparatively little. During the week there were issued sixteen permits covering the erection of twenty-one buildings, aggregating in cost $61,850. Of the new buildings to be erected, eight will be in the northwest section and will aggregate in cost $41,500 Only one permit was issued in the southwest section and that was for a stable to cost $300. In the northeast four buildings will be constructed at a cost of $6,250; in the southeast, five buildings to cost $11,700, and in the county three buildings to

RENTS IN WASHINGTON.

Good Reasons Why They Should Be Higher Than in Other Cities.

The annual influx of strangers that marks the approach of a new session of Congress is now under full headway. Besides the members of Congress many of whom come to the Capital for the first time, there are thousands of others drawn hither by business or social interests, who are gathering in Washington and for several months will make the city their home. A large percentage of the newcomers will live at hotels or in boardinghouses, but another considerable percentage are intent on setting up establishments of their own, some in furnished rooms, others in apartment houses, and still others in separate residences. A large part of the business of real estate men just now consists of providing these new-comers with the sort of rooms, flats, or residences they require. And the real estate men say that they are hearing frequently again the old complaint about the rate of house-rental in Washington, which is compared with rates prevailing in other cities of the same size as Washington and even of larger size. These comparisons are unfavorable to Washington, where it is charged house rent is considerably higher than elsewhere. "A curious fact about the people who make these complaints," said a real estate man, whose views, as interviews by a HERALD reporter showed, were generally shared by others in the business, "is that they all unite in praising the beauty of the city, its wide, clean, smoothly-paved streets, its many and beautifully kept parks, its splendid public school system, its magnificent public and private buildings, the good order that prevails here, and generally the extraordinary attractions of the city materially and socially as a place of residence. They all unite in this sort of laudatory talk regarding Washington, and can hardly express their pleasure at the prospect of coming to live here."

"In short," the real estate man continued, "they are charmed with all the advantages which residence here affords, and they readily admit that Washington is in every way the most desirable city in America for refined, intelligent people, who are interested in something besides money-making and are fond of good society, to live in. But when they come to the question of rents their enthusiasm cools. They complain that rents are higher than they have been accustomed to pay in other cities, which they have just admitted are not to be compared to Washington in those material and social attractions which make a city desirable as a place of residence. In other words, they recognize all the advantages Washington offers, but they fail to remember that these advantages-finely paved streets, numerous parks, a model government, splendid pub ic schools, etc., -cost big money to maintain, increase the value of real estate, and have a tendency to make rents a little higher than they are in cities which have not these advantages. They are eager to enjoy the pleasures of life in the National Capital, but they are somewhat reluctant to pay for these pleasures. That's about the size of the mat-

Another factor in the case, which real estate men interviewed by THE HERALD reporter generally pointed out as tending naturally and legitimately to increase the price of real estate and therefore of rent in Washington, was the large number of wealthy people from different sections who have come here of late years to make their home. These people are ready and willing to pay the highest prices for desirable sites on which to build their houses, If they want a particular piece of property they will not let a few thousand dollars more or less stand in the way of getting it. Real estate like everything else is worth what it will bring in the open market, and Washington real estate holders, it was pointed out would be fools if they didn't get all they could for their property. This feature of the business here has inevitably had the tendency to raise real estate prices generally, especially in the fashionable northwestern section; and rents, which are founded on real estate values, have gone up correspondingly.

Then the fact that the population of Washington fluctuates so widely, being largest when Congress is in session and falling off when it adjourns, was indicated as another good cause for some of the difference in the rent rate between this and other cities. Where householders have tenants who will remain all the year round and year after year, they can afford to accept a smaller rental than where their tenants take houses only for a few months, and the houses are liable to remain empty waiting for a new tenant when the old one goes out when Congress adjourns or the hot season sets in. House-owners are obliged to make a fair average rental for the year while their houses are occupied during the busy acason Another factor in the social economy of Washington, which has a considerable effect, is the scale of wages paid by the Government to its employes. This scale is much higher than prevails in commercial cities and the private business concerns and manufacturers of Washington are forced to approximate it in the payment of their employes. The effect is also felt in the building trades, where workmen receive a high rate of wages which materially increases the cost of construction

One real estate dealer said that many clerks in Washington rent houses beyond their means and in order to bring their expenses down they sub rent rooms. "There is more sub-renting done in this city," he said, "than in any other in the United States.'

From the information obtained by the THE HERALD it would seem that though rent in Washington may be a little higher than in other cities of equal size, there is very good cause for the circumstance and residents get more for their money than they do elsewhere.

REAL ESTATE VALUES

Determined by the Assessor's Annual Re

port-Recommendations Made. The annual report of Assessor Trimble, covering the operations of his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, was submitted to the Commissioners on Friday. A table shows the assessed value of the taxable real estate in the District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, to be as follows:

Taxable on land, $64,257,934.00; taxable on improvements, $62,125,650.00; total, $126,383,-584.00. Georgetown-Taxable on land, $2,698,476.00; taxable on improvements, $2,984.200.00; total, $5,682,676.00. County— Taxable on land at $1.50, $6,480,584.00; taxable on improvements at $1.50, $3,006,150.00; total, $9,486,734.00. Taxable on land at $1, $3,014,034.00; taxable on improvements at $1, $914,250.00; total, $3,928,284.00. Total assessed value of real estate, $145,481,278.00. Personal property—Washington, $11,146,-341.00; Georgetown, $558,834.00; county, $121,015.00; total, $11,826,190.00. Total assessed value of real and personal property in the District of Columbia on July 1, 1891, $157,307,468.00. Amount of tax for 1891-'92; Washington at $1.50, $1,895,753.76; Georgetown at $1.50, $85,240.14; county at $1.50, $142,301.01; county at $1, $39,282.84. Total real estate tax, $2,162,577.75. Personal tax, $180,366.11. Total real and personal tax,

$2,342,943.86. Mr. Trimble devotes considerable space in his report to the triennial assessment of 1893. He says that the three assessors appointed have been furnished with all possible conveniences to expedite their work, and have it completed by the time specified. "When this work is finally completed", says Mr. Trimble, "I trust that the Commissioners and our citizens generally will have cause for congratulation that the old system has passed away and the new one successfully inaugurated." An amendment to the present law is suggested, so that the exemption of church property from taxation be confined to that actually held and exclusively used for divine worship. The report recommends the repealing of the personal tax law, and the subtitution of a general graded license law. Mr. Trimble also recommends that the tax law should be so amended as to require the purchasers at tax sales to pay all arrears of taxes before receiving a deed from the Commissioners for the property sold. The report asks for an increase in the clerical force, due to the steady increase in the business of the office.

Excelsior.

Longfellow's word picture of the "Youth who bore 'mid snow and ice, a banner with this strange device," almost every school boy is familiar with. Few people know that our trade mark "To-Kalon," the name Mr. Crabb gave to his vineyard, practically means the same thing. He adopted this his device, his watchword, to be lived up to in all respects, not "mid snow and ice," but amid the discouragements and difficulties of new soil, new climate, endless experiment, and no market save one to be created by manifest merit.

In the Greek, as is well known, the same word signifies both good and beautiful, or either. So, To-Kalon, "the beautiful," in its broader sense is simply Excelsior.

We are the custodians here for the best of theout put of this famous vineyard. We endeavor in all things to be worthy the "device." Our stock of wines is larger, than ever before; wines of age and full maturity are ever inviting inspection. Our prices are standard, and vary only with age and quality.

AT THE TOP IN NEW YORK.

The Just Completed Tower of the Famous Madison Square Garden. The grandeur of the proportions of the Madison Square Garden, New York, may be inferred from the size of the figure of Diana, which serves as the wind vane of the structure and is about twenty feet high and a thou sand pounds in weight. From the street to the brow of the goddess is a distance of about 340 feet, and the view from the tower, taken by visitors at an elevation of 300 feet from the sidewalk, is the most eligible of all the high places in the commercial metropolis. Before many weeks are past a clock, with a diameter of twenty-two feet, will be placed in position in the tower. At night it will be brilliantly illuminated, increasing the nocturnal glories of the building, which are unique in their

The importance of this organization has been fully demonstrated during the past year and it is receiving the hearty support of subordinate fraternal bodies for the reason that its maintenance is essential to their continued prosperity. The benefits secured to all members of fraternal societies represented therein are apparent from the incressed representation for the ensuing year. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company's Latest Publication. Fresh from the press comes the daintiest of books, bearing the title of "Winter Excur-sions, Pennsylvania Railroad." Its frontispiece is a handsome half-tone from a painting by Richards, of Silver Springs, near Ocala; and distributed throughout this work of one hundred and four pages are beautiful reproductions illuminating the pages of descriptive matter and rates which cover all the prominent Southern winter resorts. In this progressive age of travel, when the tourist is humoured with personally-conducted tours departing in vestibule trains luxuriously appointed, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has considered it time to place in the hands of the winter traveler, as well as the summer tourist, a comprehensive guide directing attention to the many health and recreative resorts where the severe Northern season may be escaped when refuged in a mild Southern harbor of warm sun and air. This handsome compendium is to be distributed gratuitously, and may be procured upon application to ticket agents. A Card.

The centrally-located property at 1412 New York avenue has been secured by Charles A. Eckstein, and will be conducted as a firstclass restaurant. Mr. Eckstein, the wellknown caterer to gentlemen's palates and dispositions, was for eleven years the popular barkeeper at the Riggs' House. He is an excellent judge of wines, liquors, and cigars, and will hand over his bar nothing but the very best goods. His restaurant is furnished with all the modern appliances for the comfort and convenience of his patrons. You are invited to call at his elegant establishment and there sample his goods and judge for
